ABSTRACT

The aim of this research is to describe and analyze the implementation of protecting the rights of santri children at the Krapyak Islamic Boarding School, Yogyakarta. Next, identify the obstacles and efforts made by Islamic boarding schools in carrying out child protection efforts. This research uses a descriptive qualitative research approach, with research subjects determined purposively where the research subjects are students' children and students' caregivers in the Krapyak Yogyakarta Islamic boarding school environment. Data collection techniques using interviews and documentation. The data validity checking technique is carried out using cross check data. Inductive data analysis which includes data reduction, categorization and unitization of data, data presentation and drawing conclusions. The results of the research show that first, the Al-Munawwir Islamic boarding school has implemented or implemented the protection and fulfillment of children's rights in accordance with applicable provisions, namely the International Convention on children's rights which has been ratified by the Indonesian government as outlined in the Child Protection Law, Second However, they still encounter several minor obstacles, such as juvenile delinquency and fulfilling the objectives of the Islamic boarding school itself, which in practice means that the fulfillment of several children's rights is limited. The existence of these obstacles does not prevent children or students from obtaining children's rights as they should in the environment of educational institutions because the obstacles that arise also have a positive impact on increasing the discipline of students and increasing the focus of students in their efforts to study religious knowledge. Third, the Islamic boarding school, which is aware of several minor obstacles, has followed up with preventive and repressive efforts as an effort to create a better and more inclusive educational institution for all parties involved in it.,
