ABSTRACT

This PPM aims to disseminate information about the preventive efforts of each individual in fighting the virus that causes Covid-19, followed by disseminating how to make handwash soap so that it can improve participant skills in producing useful products, both for personal use and for sale. This activity is a community-campus synergy in fighting the Covid-19 pandemic. This socialization consists of two steps, namely disseminating information about preventive efforts to fight the virus that causes Covid-19 and making hand washing products to improve participant skills in producing highly efficient products. This article emphasizes the implementation of handwash soap in an effort to prevent the spread of the Covid-19 virus. To collect participants' opinions, a questionnaire was used as an assessment of the success of the activity. The results showed that the participants rated the handwash soap making training as useful in a pandemic like now. Other results are discussed in this article.
