This study aims to determine drug control through the internalisation of Pancasila values in high school, find the right drug prevention policies in public high schools in the city of Yogyakarta and find out the implementation of the drug prevention policies. The research method is planned to use descriptive research with a qualitative research method approach. Determination of the subject of the study was carried out by purposive and snowball techniques, with criteria for parties who have involvement, experience, knowledge and authority in implementing drug prevention policies through the internalization of Pancasila values in high schools in the city of Yogyakarta. The technique of data collection is done by interviews, and documentation of the validity of the data is obtained through cross check. Data analysis uses inductive analysis techniques. The target to be achieved from this study can be found drug prevention policies through the internalization of Pancasila values in schools that are in accordance with national identity.

The results showed that drug prevention policies through the internalization of Pancasila values in schools were not explicitly conducted, but implicitly implicit in every school policy that supports all student activities that are organizational and incidental, for example by the establishment of anti-drug task forces in each school is managed by students with the guidance of schools and the National Narcotics Agency (BNN) of the Special Region of Yogyakarta and the BNN of the City of Yogyakarta, counseling the dangers of drugs and the introduction of the school environment which all involve the active role of students. Constraints that arise from the existence of drug prevention policies through the internalization of Pancasila values are the existence of opposing parties, and parents' indifference to their children's activities in school. The persuasive approach has been carried out by the school to those who oppose student activities at school.
