ABSTRACT

Abstract

A sports athlete especially women is a social creature and will always be in touch with other people. In his mature age, it cannot be denied that the desire to bring forth sexual behavior as one of the basic human needs of an adult will be actualized in his life. However, his activities as a sports athlete sometimes lead to deviations in sexual behavior which is certainly very contrary to his nature as a normal human being as well as deviating from the norms that exist in society in general. This study aims to explain the deviation of sexual behavior orientation in female athletes related to how they identify their sexual roles and their influence on their sexual relations with their partners.

In understanding the phenomenon of sexual behavior orientation deviation, researchers used qualitative methods with a phenomenological approach. Data collection techniques are carried out by observation, interviews, documentation and Focus Group Discussion. The validity of the results of the study was conducted using intersubjective validity and strengthened by data triangulation and member check. The process of data analysis uses the analysis concepts of Miles and Huberman which go through four stages of preparation, namely the stages of data collection, data reduction, data presentation, and conclusion drawing.

The results of the study showed that lesbian identity did not immediately arise and was taken for granted by an individual. This identity emerges through the stages of development of lesbian identity. This is related to the process of being a lesbian. All informants have different stages and not all informants reach the stage of identity synthesis. Sexual behavior is formed because of the learning process carried out by a lesbian through electronic media and colleagues. The driving factor for sexual behavior in lesbian couples is parenting, peer groups, and mass media. While the inhibiting factors of sexual behavior in lesbian couples, namely, personal motivation, beliefs, and norms that apply in the neighborhood.
