ABSTRACT

This activity was originally planned with the theme of woman empowerment with batik ecoprint production. The initial goal was to improve the standard of living of the family through the eco print batik business. However, due to large-scale restrictions related to the Covid-19 pandemic, this theme could not be implemented, so the theme was shifted in collaboration with other groups. The new theme adopted was the e-learning development workshop for geography teachers. The activity was carried out online and was attended by 25 teachers from all over Indonesia. The activity was carried out by starting with an introduction from the trainer by presenting relevant material, followed by discussion, and practice by participants with the supervision of the trainer. The participant's work is collected online. Activities carried out smoothly with obstacles in the form of: internet signal constraints from both sides, trainer and participants. In the future, it is hoped that all training components will prepare the network better and materials will be provided before the start of activities so that participants can learn them first.
