ABSTRACT

This study aims to: (1) determine the learning culture of millennial era students in developing their competence and (2) determine the factors that affect the learning culture of millennial era students. The data in this study were taken by conducting an online survey using Google Forms.

The population in this study were students of the S1 TP FIP UNY Study Program. Samples were taken by purposive sampling technique, namely semester 1 students and semester 7 students. Semester 1 students represent students who have not interacted with climate and academic life in campus for a long time, while semester 7 students represent final semester TP students who have sufficient experience in taking lectures on campus. and interacting with the climate and academic life on campus. The research instrument used was a questionnaire consisting of 80 statements related to the learning culture of millennial era students and the factors that influence it. The collected data were analyzed using quantitative descriptive methods. Based on the research results, it can be concluded that the learning culture of millennial era students is influenced by sociological aspects (language, knowledge systems, religious systems, social systems, as well as livelihood and economic systems) and aspects of globalization (technology systems and equipment, arts, environment, beliefs rooted, a meeting between nations and the RAS). In general, all sociological and globalization aspects fall into the fairly good category. In addition, based on research data, the dominant factors affecting the learning culture of millennial era students and need to be improved are language, arts, and meetings between nations. Overall, from all the existing factors, it can be said that the millennial culture of TP FIP UNY S1 Study Program students from 2015-2020 began to stick with students and became a positive trend that must be maintained so that the culture of independent learning for millennial children is maintained.
