The second day's activity was in the form of mentoring in drafting classroom action research proposals. Problem identification activities are carried out in small groups according to the study group. There are 13 groups that produce identification problems and determine the main problems that will be raised as research topics. On the second day, with the same steps in the first day's activities, the teachers individually prepared classroom action research proposals according to their respective fields of study. At the end of the activity 24 PTK proposals were collected which were then reviewed by the team and the results of the review were sent back to teachers via email for follow-up.
